I come to school to try and make it to graduation. I do miss class and I am behind on my credits. My problem is having to get up so early having such a schedule to tend to. Personally I'm not much of a schedule type of person. I don't like being tied down; I don't like having to be here or there on a certain time. I think the online school is a good idea, and I agree with that because I have friends that do school online and it works for them. I've always believed to each is own, what works for you. My progress is getting better but it's still not enough. I get distracted too easily and I always get up and go do something when I should be in class doing something. I think they should have a program where you come in and get work to do for the week and be able to take it home or stay at school, whatever. It would make it easier for students and help with less of a dropout rate. It's definitely something I'd be interested in.
